Jews On Tight Spot In Argentina, Tour Leaders Report; Arab League, Neo-Fascists, Some Priests, Agitators Opposed Ineffectively

Leaders of the American Jewish Committee who have completed a tour of four South American countries said in New York that the Arab League was intensifying its activities against the 450,000 Jews in Argentina. Morris B. Abram, president of the agency and head of the delegation, said that the Argentine Government, the press, and the Roman Catholic Church had manifested their goodwill, says the New York Times, but that their "techniques" of opposing anti-Jewish activities were "ineffective."

Mr. Abram and the other leaders, who have just returned from a three-week, 15,000-mile mission to four South American countries, spoke at a news conference at the agency's Institute of Human Relations, 165 East 56th Street.

The agency, established in 1906, is devoted to safeguarding the civil and religious rights of Jews the world over.

Mr. Abram held that although the Argentine penal code outlawed the neo-Fascist, anti-Semitic Tacuara, and Guardia Restauradora Nacionalista last year, "there has been a proliferation of such groups and increased violent activities, with ineffectual enforcement of the law."

In this connection, Mr. Abram said there had been 150 incidents of violence against Jews in Argentina involving deaths, bombings, and other outrages "which have been reported in the last three months without any arrests."

These incidents, he added, have resulted in the Jewish deaths, "yet the newspapers have underplayed these stories."

Last August, Mr. Abram reported, Deputy Juan Scaliter introduced a resolution in the Chamber of Deputies providing that Argentina would not permit questions relating to differences in race and religion to arise.

"The resolution has not been passed," Mr. Abram said.

The Arab League, he added, "has given rise to extremist groups," and is making its presence felt in Brazil. The League, he said, is "sowing discord, disunity, and distrust," reports the New York Times. He reported anti-Semitic activities of the Rev. Julio Meinvielle, a Catholic priest in Buenos Aires, "and other local Catholic priests" and said there had been no attempt to thwart their operations.

On the other hand, Mr. Abram said, he was "heartened" by the visiting group's meetings with Jaime Cardinal da Barros Cauara in Rio de Janeiro and other ranking Catholic prelates in other South American countries who have indicated their support for the decree on the Jews that may be on the agenda of the Ecumenical Council at the Vatican next month.

Mr. Abram termed of "prime importance" the passage of a statement defining Catholic-Jewish relations and stating that the Jews bore no guilt in the crucifixion of Jesus.

The adoption of such a statement, he added, would be highly effective in thwarting anti-Semitism in South America and would lead to the deletion of unkind references to Jews in Catholic textbooks.

He contended that "if economic conditions continue to deteriorate as they have been in Argentina, Brazil, and Chile, reactionary elements from within and outside the South American continent would find it relatively easy to use Jews as scapegoats."

Brazil has a Jewish population of 130,000 to 150,000 and Chile of 40,000.

The delegation found what Mr. Abram termed a "critical" shortage of qualified rabbis, teachers, social workers as youth leaders in Jewish communities everywhere in South America, says the New York Times. Mr. Abram said his agency would seek the active cooperation of Jewish educational, religious, and social-welfare groups in the United States to meet this need.

TELLS HOW CARDINAL SPELLMAN'S RESPONSE TO RABBI SILVER'S MISSION GREATLY AIDED ISRAEL GETTING INTO U. N.

A leading American Zionist disclosed that Cardinal Spellman had an active role in the admission of Israel to the United Nations in 1949.

Charles H. Silver said the Cardinal had been influential in swinging several South American delegations to the side of the struggling new nation.

Mr. Silver, a close friend of the Cardinal's, made the disclosure several months ago in introducing the Cardinal at Beth Israel Hospital's 75th anniversary dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, in New York, says the New York Times. Mr. Silver is president of the Hospital.

A former president of the Board of Education and now an executive assistant to Mayor Wagner, Mr. Silver said he had kept the secret of Cardinal Spellman's participation for fifteen years.

But, he said, "in this time of vindictive post-mortems and afterthoughts about the apathy of other faiths when the survival of the Jewish people was threatened, I feel that this story should now be told."

This was an allusion to the play, "The Deputy", by a German, Rolf Hochhuth, which accuses Pope Pius XII of silence in the face of Nazi persecution of the Jews.

Mr. Silver said the story of the Cardinal's aid — "one of the most amazing stories of brotherhood and fellowship among men of goodwill you are ever likely to hear" — began in late April, 1949, soon after Israel had signed an armistice with the Arabs and applied for membership in the United Nations.

Israel achieved independence on May 14, 1948, but was immediately attacked by states of the Arab League. After the armistice, opposition to Israel's admission to the United Nations developed because of her refusal to readmit Arab refugees and because she had expanded her territory beyond the original United Nations formula.

The late Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver, the spearhead of Zionism in America, came to visit Mr. Silver on a special mission in April, 1949. He wanted Mr. Silver to obtain a statement from Cardinal Spellman supporting the admission of Israel to the United Nations, says the New York Times. That same day, on an outdoor walk, Mr. Silver said, he presented the proposition to the Cardinal.

"I will do something that may mean a great deal more," the Cardinal is reported to have replied.

The Cardinal, according to Mr. Silver, said he would call on delegates and persons of importance in the South American bodies and "share with them his fond wish" that Israel be admitted.

"Well, my friends," Mr. Silver said, "for a moment my heart seemed to stop beating. It was a terrific gesture of support. He had made it without a moment's hesitation — and it was much more than a gesture."

"The rest," Mr. Silver said, "is history. When the vote was taken, Israel became the 59th member of the United Nations, winning by almost exactly the number of countries to which His Eminence had gone for assistance in our cause."

(In fact, the vote in the General Assembly on May 11, 1949, was thirty-seven to twelve for Israel's admission.

Mr. Silver then introduced Cardinal Spellman, the guest of honor at the anniversary banquet, as "the great churchman whose unhesitating help changed the course of history and made Israel a nation among nations."

Mr. Silver also said that the Cardinal had made gifts to Beth Israel Hospital over the years totalling more than $200,000.

The Hospital, at Stuyvesant Square and 17th Street, was founded in 1889 as a non-sectarian, voluntary institution. Its bed capacity under a present expansion drive is being increased to 650, says the New York Times. Mr. Silver is also active in the Alfred E. Smith Memorial Foundation, which was founded by the Cardinal. This Foundation raises funds for schools and hospitals.

SOVIET TRADE BOYCOTT OF ISRAEL TO END; BUT SOVIET JEWS STILL IN PLIGHT

Levi Eshkol, Premier of Israel, reported that he saw signs of a thaw in the Soviet Union's attitude toward Israel. He said the change followed efforts he initiated last year to seek a way to the hearts of Eastern European countries, in an interview in the newspaper, Maariv, reports the New York Times. Mr. Eshkol said that, unfortunately, these gains were not matched by any improvement in Moscow's attitude toward Jews inside the Soviet Union.

(Moscow's Central Synagogue was a scene of brisk activity on the eve of Rosh ha-Shanah, the Jewish New Year. Worshipers crowded not only the chapel but the vestibules and the adjoining street.)

As one indication of a new Soviet attitude, Premier Eshkol cited recent efforts by Ambassador Mikhail F. Bodrov and his staff to appear before the Israeli public and make themselves understood.

Another example, he said, was an agreement for the sale of Soviet real estate in Jerusalem to the Israeli Government. The agreement has been concluded and is to be signed in Moscow shortly.

It has been welcomed in Israel largely because it provides that two-thirds of the four and one-half million purchase price is to be paid in kind. In effect, that will end the Soviet trade boycott of Israel, which has been enforced since 1956, when Moscow broke an oil-for-citrus barter deal in anger over the Israeli-British-French attack on Egypt.

Improved relations with all Soviet-bloc countries except Czechoslovakia have been noted.

The press voiced pleasure recently when Israel's envoy to Bucharest was received by the President of Rumania to present his credentials. Reports said that President Gheorge Gheorghiu-Dej had been "extraordinarily friendly", according to the New York Times, when he talked with the envoy, Ambassador Zvi Ayalon, after the ceremony.

It was also noted that the Polish Ambassador called upon Premier Eshkol in Jerusalem last month to express satisfaction over the Israeli's statement that the Oder-Neisse borderline between Poland and Germany should be accepted as a permanent fact.

The Polish Ambassador was reported to have said that the same principle — peaceful settlement of border issues — should apply in the Middle East. Bulgaria, Mr. Eshkol pointed out, has reached an agreement for air service with Israel.

Israel's trade with the satellite countries has increased, and the treatment of Jews in these countries is reported to have improved.

Premier Eshkol said in the Maariv interview that he expected to confer with Chancellor Ludwig Erhard of West Germany before the Israeli national elections next summer on "very substantial and important matters." Mr. Eshkol indicated renewed concern over the employment of German scientists to develop arms in the United Arab Republic.

Discussing German-Israeli relations in general, Mr. Eshkol noted that the Germans were Israel's second-largest customer, after Britain. But he added: "That is not all. There are even greater and more decisive matters."

Mr. Eshkol said it was not up to Israel to forgive the Germans for their Nazi past. "They must struggle to prove day by day that they deserve such absolution," he said.

Some of the tension between Israel and the Soviet Union has centered on Moscow's accusations that Israeli diplomats promote Zionism among Soviet Jews. On August 30, Moscow's Jewish congregation was reported to have barred three members from the synagogue for three months on the ground of having improper contacts with Israeli agents.

At the same time, Soviet newspapers named four staff members of the Israeli Embassy as distributors of "nationalistic Zionist literature." The embassy denied the charge. Soviet authorities indicated displeasure last year when Moscow synagogue leaders attended a Seder, or Passover feast, in the Israeli Embassy.

Israeli Statement Warns World On Mid-East Aggression

Israel appealed for world repudiation of the resolutions passed in Alexandria at the Arab leaders' conference. An official statement in Jerusalem assailed the announcement in Alexandria, says the New York Times, of a plan for joint action "to liberate Palestine from Zionist imperialism."

The announcement, the statement said, amounted to a declaration by thirteen countries, members of the United Nations, of their intent to destroy the state of Israel.

"The world," the Israeli statement said, "would do well not to revert to the attitude of complacency, silence, and lack of concern which it once evinced toward threats of aggression and war, accompanied by political and military preparations aimed at transplanting the threats into action."

The statement was issued after the Cabinet held a preliminary discussion on the meeting of Arab kings and heads of state. Partly, its purpose appeared to be to dispel a feeling of complacency in Israel arising from apparent disunity among Arab leaders and the failure of efforts by President Gamal Abdul Nasser, of the United Arab Republic, to post Egyptian troops in Jordan, Lebanon, and Syria.

"The state of Israel is, of course, resolved to repel and thwart any aggression against her," the statement said. "Nevertheless, peace-loving states in the world, the United Nations, and enlightened public opinion are surely not entitled to reconcile themselves to public announcements of aggressive intent and to declarations which violate the purpose of the United Nations Charter and the accepted principles governing relations between states."

The statement also dealt with the Arab resolution for the implementation of military and technical plans to divert the tributaries of the Jordan River and prevent the waters from reaching Israel, says the New York Times. The Israeli Government repeated a warning issued last January after another Arab conference, in Cairo, had resolved to cut off Israel sources of water. The warning said:

"Israel will draw water from the Sea of Galilee within the quantities allotted to her in the unified plan. Israel will oppose unilateral and illegal measures by Arab countries and will act to preserve her vital rights."

The "unified plan" for division of the water was worked out by the late Eric Johnson, President Eisenhower's special envoy with Arab and Israeli technicians, but was later rejected by the Arab League.

Israel plans to divert Jordan River water by pipe and canal to irrigate its arid Negev region, which covers half the country. The river, which flows into the Sea of Galilee, forms part of the border between Israel and Jordan. The first stage of the project involves drawing water from the Sea of Galilee.

CALL TO CONVERSION TO JUDAISM

By Rabbi Sol Landau, co-rabbi of the Park Synagogue, in Cleveland, Ohio, writing in the United Synagogue Review

But, Rabbi, we've in love.

I have heard the impassioned cry many times before. This time two young people are sitting in my study, speaking of their determination to be married despite their parents' strong disapproval. Joe is from a non-observing Jewish family; Alice was reared in a devout Protestant home. They have come to discuss her intention of converting to Judaism.

Many reasons impel people to convert. Men and women have sought me out for instruction in Judaism because they had heard of its teachings and considered its values spiritually appealing and attractive. Some have been motivated by their love for the Old Testament and their close study of it, resulting in a mounting conviction that it alone was acceptable to them.

Cases like these rarely draw wide attention. But the drama of cases involving couples like Joe and Alice is usually more widely publicized. It must be borne in mind, however, that unless there is a profound religious conviction on the part of the convert, he should not be encouraged. Even in such cases, it has traditionally been the rabbi's function to dissuade him.

Alice has such a profound conviction. She and Joe tell me their personal histories. They acknowledge the complex emotional situation that has developed with families and friends and can foresee some of the difficulties inherent in intermarriage. They seem to try to forestall any argument I may advance with the finality of young ardor: But, Rabbi, we're in love.

In the last five years I have given instructions to twelve Catholics, three Presbyterians, four Congregationalists, three Disciples, four Baptists, three Unitarians, four Methodists, three Calvinists and one Mormon. These thirty-two women and five men came from almost every state in the union. Two were girls whom Jewish men met while on military duty overseas.

Love is usually assumed to be absolute assurance that the contemplated marriage will be successful. Tendentious as this may be, it only addresses itself indirectly to the question whether the person who is not born a Jew will be able to accept Judaism and identify as a Jew.

I do not attempt to dissuade Alice from her intention to become a Jewess; her mind is closed to rational argument at this time. Were I to make any radical statements at this point, I might end my contact with her and her boy friend. At ensuing meetings, I know from experience, discussions in a more relaxed atmosphere will be possible. Frequently would-be converts have had second thoughts during instruction and have abandoned their plans for conversion.

Rather than "argue" at this point, therefore, I explain to Alice and Joe what the formal requirements for conversion are. I warn them that at this time it is hardly possible for Alice to know what Judaism is, so that the genuineness of her desire will need to be tested against her findings during the next four months, both intellectually and emotionally.

"But, Rabbi, aren't you going to discourage us?" Joe asks.

Although they are eager to forestall my arguments, they seem rather shocked that I do not give them the kind of lecture to which they have apparently resigned themselves.

"No," I answer, "I'm going to let you find out for yourselves whether you can accept the following."

I read aloud from the pledge Alice will be asked to take: I hereby declare my desire to accept the principles of Judaism, to adhere to its practices and ceremonies and to become a member of the Jewish people.

I make it clear to Alice that she can terminate her studies at any time if she should find herself unable to accept certain major beliefs of Judaism or unable to identify with the Jewish people. In essence, she will be renouncing her birthright and some of the indelible impressions of her childhood.

In accordance with tradition, I make it a practice to brief the applicant on the difficulties of living up to Judaism. As a result, I have found that a convert who persists through to the ultimate step is well fortified against the danger of backsliding.

Indeed, it is a widely known psychological truth that the convert to any cause, not only to a religion, is its most ardent adherent. Of the converts who embraced Judaism through me, only one reverted to the church of her birth — a very young girl who left her husband after their first major quarrel, on a subject that had nothing whatever to do with religion.

I explain to Alice that there will be three major areas of instruction: the four-thousand-year history of the Jewish people, the basic beliefs of Judaism and actual Jewish life in home, synagogue and community, including holiday observances.

A good many of the discussions will center on the differences between Judaism and her native Protestantism. For many converts the question: Will I forfeit my share in the world to come? is a real and troubling one, and is often raised during such sessions.

The next few weeks are dramatic ones for Alice. They involve not only the intellectual exploration of Judaism, but her own personal psychological adjustment to her conversion. All this is greatly affected by the reactions of her family and friends. When a wonderful Christian couple came to discuss their daughter's conversion, the mother said to me:

"I'd like our daughter's future husband, although we oppose intermarriage, but we are deeply grieved that his notable conversion to Judaism will make her ineligible to be rescued by the Savior."

Joe and Alice meet with me once a week. In almost all cases involving couples, I insist that the born Jew participate in these sessions, so that the meaning of Jewishness may take on real substance for both of them. It also strengthens the relationship between the rabbi and the couple, which may link them later to synagogue life.

Too often the born Jew frustrates the efforts of the new convert to practise Judaism and even refuses to affiliate with a synagogue. One convert complained:

"Now I don't seem to belong anywhere, and when I feel in need of a spiritual counselor I don't know where to turn. I do not want to be disloyal and contact my

Chevrolet For 1965 Emphasizes New Look, With New Ride And Power

Dramatic new styling emphasizes that 1965 Chevrolets are lower, longer and wider and have a completely new body and chassis, General Motors of Canada announced.

The combination of more shoulder room and a trimmer look is achieved by newly designed side pillars incorporating curved sideglass. The complete line includes Chevrolet, Chevelle, Chevy II, Corvair and Corvette. Last year's luxury has been added to and refined in the four series of regular Chevrolet: Impala Super Sport, Impala, Bel Air and Biscayne.

Chevrolet is offered in 45 models for 1965. All models are completely restyled from bumper to bumper and the choice of options and custom features covers the widest range in Chevrolet history. The 1965 Chevrolet can be virtually custom built to personal taste; noteworthy among options is the new integral-type power steering.

Inside, the roominess and new styling are immediately apparent. New interior trims enhance the distinctive instrument panel with its full-width recessed area and massive instrument cluster, which are restyled for better visibility and greater comfort of operation, and recessed for safety.

The all-new chassis design gives a steadier, more stable ride with better handling and roadability. It utilizes a perimeter-type frame with a new full coil suspension system.

In its second year, Chevelle continues to offer a new line of cars in its size and price range with 13 models in four series: Malibu Super Sport, Malibu, Chevelle 300 Deluxe and Chevelle 300. For 1965 a convertible has been added to the Chevelle 300 series. The 1965 Chevelle has a longer, lower appearance with a freshly-styled hood, grille, bumper and front fenders.

The Malibu Super Sport models have a particularly distinctive grille with black accent bars. A hood windsplit molding is used on all Malibu models. All series are identified by individual rear-end treatment and rear fender nameplates. New tail lights are larger for all models.

The new look gives fresh beauty to the 1965 Chevy II. The full-width grille is integrated with redesigned headlights and parking lights are relocated to the bumper for maximum visibility.

The slim roofline sweeps lower to streamline rear windows that are flatter this year. A new "floating" grille highlights the restyling of both Sting Ray models in the Corvette for '65. There is a smooth, new hood styling and functional front fender exhaust louvres for greater engine compartment cooling. The body sill molding and emblems are new and so are the colours, the luxurious interior trim, with four-position ignition, instrument panel, and the wheel trim covers with racing or "mag" wheel styling.

The new dimensions of Chevrolet this year become something else again in the Corvair for '65, a car sensationally new and beautiful in size and style.

The new Corsa Series replaces the Monza Spyder. The high-powered beauty is available with four engine choices and 11 power team combinations.

former minister, nor am I in a position to consult any rabbi with whom I have a relationship.

Yet there are those who have successfully gone through all the phases of adjustment to and in conversion. One such couple is active in the cultural life of the congregation and particularly in the parent work of the religious school. It goes without saying that they are completely accepted by the other members.

As Alice begins to attend services and gradually increasing participation will introduce Alice to the structure and mood of Jewish worship and further aid her in identifying with the spiritual and physical Jewish fellowship.

More than three months pass. Alice's original conviction has been reinforced through closer study of Jewish life and practices. She has a firm grounding in the meaning of Judaism, in Jewish history and in the rituals of home and synagogue.

Her parents, once violently opposed to her marrying Joe, have been moved by her sincerity of purpose, and have called on me to tell me they approve the marriage. Alice is now ready for the final requirements: first the immersion ceremony (in the case of a man, circumcision is also necessary) and then the meeting with the rabbinical court.

How important ritual is, and particularly immersion, was dramatically brought home to me after a girl who was raised as a Baptist returned from this ceremony in an emotionally agitated state. She was hardly seated in my study before she said:

"I believe with my whole heart that Judaism is the only religion I can accept intellectually now. But when I was immersed in the ritual bath, I felt I was committing an act of treason toward my parents and myself — it was so reminiscent of the baptism my father took me to when I was a teenager."

The memory forced her to face once again the grave decision she had made. She experienced a great deal of agonized inner probing before she could proceed further to the final step — her appearance before the rabbinical court.

Ultimately Alice, too, reaches this stage, and I introduce her to my two colleagues on the court. They question her on the texts she has studied and inquire into her personal background. They probe her new attitudes.

How do you now regard the role of Israel?

How do you plan to practice Judaism in your home?

The questions are penetrating, searching. As Alice answers, I listen with pride and anxiety: pride because her answers reflect the effect the last few months of meetings and discussions have had on her thought processes; anxiety because I think of the converts who were eventually found wanting in spiritual stamina.

Finally Alice is excused, and the three court members consider her case — her new Jewish knowledge, her responses, above all her sincerity. I report to my colleagues on her interest in the Jewish way of life, her reactions to instruction, my personal impression of the authenticity of her declared desire for Judaism.

After some discussion, all three of us agree that she should be accepted into the Jewish faith. All of us sign the official documents attesting to her conversion. There are three copies: one will be kept in the synagogue office, one will be sent to the Jewish Theological Seminary, and one will be presented to Alice, her permanent testament to her self-chosen Judaism.

We three rabbis and Alice — all, now, fellow Jews — walk down the hall toward the chapel where we are joined by Joe. We approach the Holy Ark, and I remember the Talmudic statement: "He who makes a convert, creates a soul." Before the open Ark, we perform a simple ceremony. We rabbis read passages from the prayer book and the Bible, including portions of the Book of Ruth, herself a convert. The ritual comes to a climax with the recitation of the "shema" ("Hear, Oh, Israel, the Lord Our God, the Lord is One.") and Alice's declaration:

I sincerely pledge to regard the Jewish people as my very own, participating in its joys and sorrows; and to share its life and activities to the very best of my ability.

And I, as her rabbi, respond:

You are now a ger sedek, a stranger for righteousness, a full Jew in every respect. Welcome, new daughter of Israel.

A.J.C. CHARGES JEWISH STUDENT PERCENTAGE HIGHER IN CZARIST RUSSIA THAN IN SOVIET NOW

at large, the evidence shows that this proportion is steadily and rapidly decreasing. According to all available figures, the Soviet government is succeeding in its effort to limit the number of Jews in higher education."

In his study, Prof. DeWitt referred to an earlier work he had written entitled "Education and Professional Employment in the U.S.S.R.," a 1,359-page volume published in 1962 by the National Science Foundation. Educational authorities in the U.S.S.R. who received the book, Prof. DeWitt [illegible] that "Soviet na[illegible] . . have a special [illegible] assign to the central major higher educational establishments a certain number of nationals for preferential admissions without competitive entrance requirements."

In his study prepared for the American Jewish Congress, Prof. DeWitt said this statement by Soviet officials raised several questions. "First, is there or is there not a nationality quota? There is, and it is 'annually planned' for all key institutions. As a student of educational development," Prof. DeWitt declared, "I would say that any quota system is bad, but racial or national quotas in education are utter folly."

Professor DeWitt also noted: "If someone is admitted to an institution of higher learning on the basis of a 'preferential' nationality quota, there must, by definition, be someone else who is excluded from admission . . . Who, then, is excluded? The final question which must be raised in regard to the equality of educational opportunity for Jews in Soviet education is this: Which of the 'Soviet national republics' could nominate Jews for preferential admission quotas? I do not know of any."

The study by Prof. DeWitt contained 15 pages of text and 10 statistical tables, plus one page listing sources and references. He noted that for almost 20 years, beginning with the late 1930's, the word "Jews" as a statistical category in the U.S.S.R. did not exist in any type of current reporting of national composition such as population, number of students, native tongue, and similar categories.

Professor DeWitt said that not until the late 1950's did government statistics officially report on Jews as a specific group; previously they had been included under "other nationalities" or residual categories. While the practice of including statistics on Jews under the word "other" or "remainder" is still common, Prof. DeWitt noted, "piecemeal" figures specifically listing Jews in various occupations, educational institutions, and other aspects of Soviet life have been released from time to time.

It was on the basis of these tabulations, in combination with the 1959 Soviet census and earlier figures dating back 20 years, that Prof. DeWitt compiled the report for the American Jewish Congress and analyzed the trends on the status of Jews in Soviet higher education.

A.J.C. Charges Jewish Student Percentage Higher In Czarist Russia Than In Soviet Now

A higher percentage of Jewish students was permitted to attend universities in Czarist Russia than is permitted in the U.S.S.R. today, the American Jewish Congress charged in releasing a study of Jewish participation in Soviet higher education.

The study was prepared by Professor Nicholas DeWitt, of Indiana University, one of America's leading specialists in Soviet affairs. In his report, Prof. DeWitt said that official government statistics showed the U.S.S.R. employed a quota system "as a direct discriminatory device against the admission of Jews to institutions of higher learning in the U.S.S.R."

Approximately 3.22 per cent of the student population in Soviet universities is Jewish, according to the study. In an accompanying statement, Will Maslow, executive director of the American Jewish Congress, compared the 3.22 per cent figure with the official quotas imposed on Jews in 1887 by the Czarist Minister of Education.

According to the "History of the Jews in Russia and Poland" by the Jewish historian, Simon Dubnow, published in 1918, the Jewish university quota was 10 per cent of the Christian university population within the Pale of Settlement; five per cent outside the Pale; and three per cent in St. Petersburg and Moscow, Mr. Maslow said, adding:

"The Soviet government's own statistics on the enrollment of Jewish and other nationality groups in universities give the lie to Soviet claims that no discrimination exists against Jews in Soviet education. The study by Prof. DeWitt, combined with other extensive evidence of religious and cultural discrimination against the Jews of the U.S.S.R., deepens our concern for the future of Soviet Jewry."

Professor DeWitt, a former member of the Russian Research Center at Harvard University, said in his study that the Soviet quota system in higher education, giving preference to other nationalities over Jews in university admission, was a "major policy directive" and was "deliberately used in the U.S.S.R. as a means of discrimination against Jews." The Soviet specialist dismissed official denials of anti-Semitism in education, asserting that "tactics of deliberate confusion" were employed by the Soviet government, which "not infrequently . . . denies something merely in order to admit it."

The study included the following findings:

While the total number of day and evening students in Soviet universities increased by 248 per cent between 1935 and 1960, the number of Jewish students decreased by 39 per cent.

The proportion of Jews who had completed higher education among all professionals declined from approximately 18-19 per cent in 1941 to 8.2 per cent in 1960.

The 8.2 per cent of university graduates who are Jews contrasts sharply with the present Jewish university enrollment of 3.22 per cent. "It is obvious that the proportion of Jewish students currently enrolled in higher education is substantially smaller than the proportion of Jews who enjoyed higher education in the past," Prof. DeWitt commented.

The proportion of Jews listed as "scientists" in official Soviet statistics has [illegible] in a steady downward trend during the past 20 years, decreasing from 21.2 per cent in 1939 to 8.9 per cent in 1961.

In summarizing his study, Prof. DeWitt wrote:

"In accordance with their heritage and history, Jews living in the lands now comprising the Soviet Union have traditionally [illegible] for education, [illegible] training, in [illegible] their pro[illegible] in the [illegible] equal[illegible]

The letter concluded with the wish for the fulfilment of the prophecy of Isaiah (32.17) "and the work of righteousness shall be peace and the effect of righteousness quietness and security for ever."

The letter was dated Erev Rosh Hashanah (September 6).

Mr. Garber had earlier apprised Rabbi Levine by letter of his recent visit to Jerusalem and at the same time conveyed the sentiments of the Jewish community of Canada on the occasion of the New Year. Both wrote in Hebrew.
